

Massachusetts Aggression Reduction Center(MARC)

Train the Trainer Certification Program

About Us:

The Massachusetts Aggression Reduction Center provides free and low-cost bullying and cyberbullying prevention research and resources to schools, families, and professionals, in the United States and beyond. MARC is an academic Center at Bridgewater State University staffed by faculty, students, office staff and many wonderful volunteers. We offer free curricula, training and presentations for children; training for educators and professionals; and presentations and resources for parents and families. Devoted to violence prevention since 2004.

Train the Trainer Certification Program:

Topics

Participants will be trained and certified by MARC to educate their colleagues in bullying and cyberbullying prevention. Topics in the training have been updated to include research on the impact of the current pandemic, and an important focus on bias and diversity.

Programming

This program is intended and tested for use with professional teachers and other educational staff, faculty and administrators in K-12 schools. Professional educators who complete this training are authorized to use MARC materials and data disseminated in this workshop. Available in 4 different Workshop types: live in-person, live online, online streaming, and private workshops at your school. These trainings are standardized. Regardless of which type or method you attend, the content is the same and you will be Certified at the end of the Workshop. The cost for the training includes materials, one year of access to digital materials, and a PDP certificate (upon request).

Registration

Registration is required in order to participate.
